Going to job interview was very helpful as a freshman in high school. I learned a lot about how the real world works and some things that may not be taught in school. For example, I was put in front of judges and talked to real people who gave me their honest opinion. To add, going to job interview gave me genuine experience on how I may do a job interview in real life in the near future. During job interview, I was prepared with a folder and necessary resources like a pencil and paper with a few notes. Afterward, we were isolated and sent into a classroom with two judges who were very polite on asking questions about our selected job. We finished off shaking hands and thanking each other. Initially I was very nervous to do job interview, however, as soon as it was finished I was glad I pushed myself to do it.
